

PROGRAMME STRUCTURE
Master of Arts in History MA (History) Semester: II

Programme Outcome (PO) - For MA History Programme	History is one of the oldest subjects taught, and for any educated, cultured human it is important to know history. A vast portion of history is part of what is called 'general knowledge'. A history student needs to know much more than what history as general knowledge is, which means among other things not only knowledge of dates, dynasties, wars, treaties and other such 'important' events but also how these all came about and what were the consequences, and more importantly how historians reconstruct them and how their own biases colour historical narratives. This course familiarises students with the general world history, gives an indepth understanding of Indian history, and offers a specialisation in modern Indian history with special emphasis on the history of modern Gujarat.
Programme Specific Outcome (PSO) - For MA History Semester - II	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. help student understand the history of contemporary world, its problems and achievements 2. introduce students to the problems in and perspectives on philosophy of history and historiography 3. familiarise extensively with the history of modern India as a specialised field 4. show students how historical interpretation and history writing changes with the position the historian accepts 5. sensitise students to the contributions of subaltern classes like peasants and tribals in the making of modern India.
